Thanks. Astonished by LA's public statements. And also concerned about TES orchestrating protest campaign about results.

After a couple of email exchanges with [REDACTED] this morning he rang to tell me the outcome of their deliberations at their end.

First they are not expecting Leighton Andrews to say anything more publicly and LA is about to go on holiday until 10 September.

Officials are proposing an internal enquiry in Wales into GCSE English results – to be led by [REDACTED]
[REDACTED]

He recognises that we jointly regulate GCSEs.

The enquiry will look at

1. The process that got us to where we are today. He will want to find all the correspondence there is between us and Welsh Government on these matters, and any correspondence we have had with the SoS (this will not be an FOI request – not appropriate)
2. The implications of the results for “banding” of schools – the equivalent of league tables
3. The role of WJEC – I checked and [REDACTED] is aware of this enquiry
4. Lessons for future work as a joint regulator.

The timescale is unclear but they will need to have made some progress on this by the time the Minister is back on 10/9.

I said we would want to help them in any way we can. The ball is in their court to ask.

Welsh Government - Minister issues Direction to WJEC on English GCSE re-grade

Tuesday 11th September 2012

Minister issues Direction to WJEC on English GCSE re-grade

Minister for Education and Skills Leighton Andrews has today issued a direction to WJEC to re-grade this summer's GCSE English Language results for qualifications delivered in Wales.

On 10 September the Minister asked regulatory officials to write to WJEC seeking an undertaking that they would re-grade the qualification. No such undertaking has been received. As a result the Minister has formally issued that Direction this afternoon.

The Minister said, "Yesterday I published a serious, thorough and detailed report from my regulatory officials which stated that this year's awards were unfair to candidates. It is not right that hundreds of our learners should have to live with the consequences of having been awarded what, in all likelihood, is the wrong GCSE grade.

"We are fortunate in Wales that we have a regulatory system which allows swift resolution of injustice. We have acted to protect the interests of students in Wales, by issuing the Direction to the WJEC."

Ends

Notes to editors:

Following the publication of GCSE results in August, the Minister asked officials to undertake a Review of the GCSE English Language results. The Minister for Education and Skills accepted the recommendations of that report and as a consequence made a request to WJEC to make an undertaking to the Welsh Ministers to regrade the qualification. WJEC have made no such undertaking and the Minister for Education and Skills has agreed to issue a direction enforcing the exam board to undertake the regarding.

Welsh Ministers' powers relevant to this submission are as follows:

Part 5 of the Education Act 1997 provides the Welsh Ministers with a range of functions relating to the regulation of qualifications in Wales. In particular, section 30 of the 1997 Act allows the Welsh Ministers to keep under review all aspects of 'relevant qualifications', to set criteria for the recognition of persons who award 'relevant qualifications' and to recognise persons according to those criteria. Section 32 of the 1997 Act also enables the Welsh Ministers to place ongoing conditions of recognition on persons who are recognised to award 'relevant qualifications' under section 30.

The WJEC is an awarding organisation recognised under section 30 of the 1997 Act and is subject to the Welsh Government Conditions of Recognition issued under section 32 of that Act. As such, the above powers are relevant to the recommendations listed in this submission. Section 32A4 of the Education Act 1997 provides that the Welsh Ministers, if it appears that any recognised person 'has failed or is likely to fail to comply with any condition subject to which the accreditation has effect' and where that failure 'prejudices or would be likely to prejudice the proper award or authentication of the qualification' the Authority may direct the awarding body to take or refrain from taking specified steps with a view to securing compliance with the conditions subject to which the accreditation has effect.

Plaid Cymru - Recall Assembly Committee to get to the bottom of GCSE debacle

Recall Assembly Committee to get to the bottom of GCSE debacle
12/09/2012

Plaid Cymru AM Simon Thomas has written to the Chair of the Children and Young People Committee, Christine Chapman, asking for her to recall the committee during recess so Assembly Members can scrutinise the actions of the WJEC and the Welsh Education Minister about the GCSE row.

Plaid's Education spokesperson Simon Thomas AM said:

"We've been calling for better regulation of exams for months, before this GCSE row blew up. I have written today to the Chair and Clerk of the Children and Young People Committee of the National Assembly asking for a recall of the committee to get to the bottom of the decisions made by the WJEC and the Welsh Education Minister during the GCSE debacle. It is important that Assembly Members are able to properly scrutinise the decisions made by the Welsh Minister and by the exam board. This would strengthen the accountability of the Welsh Government as an exam regulator."

"The Westminster committees have been able to question and scrutinise both ministers and the regulator. As Leighton Andrews is both minister and regulator here in Wales, it is even more vital that we get the earliest opportunity to scrutinise his actions."

"A Plaid Cymru government would have introduced a new single exam system in Wales. It is time for the Welsh Government to shoulder its responsibilities. Students may eventually get the grades they deserve but no thanks to Education Ministers in Wales and England. The exam system in both countries after recent events will have a low level of credibility internationally."

The Mid and West AM has also tabled a series of written questions to the Welsh Government, about when powers to instruct remarking have been used by the Education Minister in the past; what discussions has the Minister had regarding changing grade boundaries with the WJEC and OFQUAL.

Nothing significant. You may have seen that Leighton Andrews has hit back publicly against Gove's comments in the select committee this morning. I suggest you make clear to [REDACTED] that we are not getting involved in the political debate; we want to be a good regulator, objective and fair - we will maintain standards, but we do not want to cause undue difficulties for students, including those in Wales, though we think they will be getting a raw deal from this.

Dear [REDACTED]

Thank you for your letter of 16 September.

As we discussed last week, you are right. In my answers to two questions from the chair of the Select Committee, I confused our challenges to WJEC's A levels and GCSEs. That was evident at the time, and Cath made that clear at the time. But to be absolutely clear, I have notified the committee clerk and asked that the record is amended.

You mention also our chair's answer to a question from the chair of the Select Committee about re-grading in Wales. Amanda very much regrets the offence that her remarks have caused to the Minister. She trusts that we will on both sides be able to overlook past incidents, and concentrate on regulating effectively in the interests of all students and all those who rely on qualifications.

As I have said before, three country regulation relies on good working relationships. We are committed to that.

I have been talking this through with [REDACTED]

Basically, the text of the letter is fine but, as he so rightly says, it puts us on the back foot. His view is that Leighton will Tweet triumphantly that he's got an apology from Ofqual, and will continue to stalk the moral high ground, cheered by those who want a regarding, even though it is he who has behaved poorly as regulator and diplomat.

[REDACTED] view is that we should use your comments as a bargaining chip: say privately to [REDACTED] that you will refuse to say anything unless (i) Leighton stops Tweeting criticisms of us and (ii) he says publicly that he's committed to the three country framework and to working with Ofqual and CCEA as a regulator. If he refuses to do so, we could consider a formal (and private) complaint to his Permanent Secretary.

I am copying this to [REDACTED] - for [REDACTED] wise advice. I am attracted to what [REDACTED] proposes. But [REDACTED] - your views? And yours [REDACTED]?

I think I expressed my concerns yesterday about how anything from me on this might be misused and I do find myself agreeing with [REDACTED] and [REDACTED] though on [REDACTED] second point I don't suppose Leighton Andrews would regard any statement he might make now as binding. We know in any case that unless the policy direction in both England and Wales changes it is only transition management, not a long term relationship.

And I recognise that this may mean it takes longer a little to settle things down. But at the end of the day the Welsh regulation team has responsibilities to Welsh children, and cannot refuse to fulfil them.

[REDACTED]

[REDACTED] and I have spoken with [REDACTED] today.

The situation is slightly more tricky than it was. The first minister for Wales was at no. ten today or yesterday, to speak with our prime minister - and made a statement afterwards, I think on the doorsteps of no ten. It was in response to media questions about GCSE English.

He said three things:

- he supported his education minister Leighton Andrews
- he - helpfully - said that what we need to do now is to move forward
- he said that our chair's remarks at the select committee were unprecedented, and wrong.

I have asked [REDACTED] whether his minister is prepared not to tweet about us. He replied that he hasn't tweeted for the last 24 hours. I asked whether his minister is prepared to commit to three country regulation. I thought that would help our chairman to recognise Leighton Andrew's concerns. He will ask, and get back to me.

Meanwhile, the letter sent to us asking for the apology is now on their website, and we are receiving press enquiries.

My intention now is to wait and see what [REDACTED] comes back with - but [REDACTED] please do think what position you wish to adopt if we get nowhere with our request for the commitment to three country regulation. We can complain to the permanent secretary but it is not likely to get us far.

Des Minsters,

CONSULTATION WITH DEVOLVED ADMINISTRATIONS

Thank you for your letter of 1 August 2012 about consultation with the devolved administrations about GCSE and A level reform, and whether we might put in place protocols to ensure appropriate liaison prior to announcements.

I agree that communication on our respective reforms to qualifications is important, and am glad that my officials briefed yours in advance of my announcement this week on examination reform. We have launched a 12 week consultation on our plans to replace the current GCSE with a rigorous new qualification, the English Baccalaureate Certificate. I am keen that our officials should continue to discuss our respective plans so that where different qualifications are offered, they are well understood and no students are disadvantaged. Where similar qualifications continue to be used across the three countries the regulators will decide how best to achieve common standards

In terms of general expectations on sharing plans about policy announcements and consultations, I note that our officials will soon be bringing forward to us draft bilateral Concordats which will set out expectations. This work should provide a helpful basis for communication between us on qualifications reform, as in other areas of policy. I do not think that a meeting on this issue is necessary, at this stage.

We have already agreed that we would organise a Ministerial discussion on reform of A levels with Mr O'Dowd. Elizabeth Truss, who is now the Minister responsible for qualifications reform, would be happy to honour that commitment. Following your joint letter, perhaps Mr Andrews might join that meeting, with an agenda broadened to cover reform of qualifications at 16 in our respective administrations. The Minister's office will be in touch shortly to agree a suitable date and time.

It would not, of course, be appropriate for that meeting to include discussion of the grading of English GCSEs this year which is the responsibility of the independent qualifications regulator, Ofqual, in England.

I am copying this letter to the Secretary of State for Wales, and the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland.

But I think the trouble is with what Amanda actually said:

'I think there is a political difficulty in Wales. In what we are seeing there is a clear divergence in performance between English and Welsh candidates. If English candidates are where we think they are based on our work, the implication is that Welsh candidate performance is not improving. This is a very difficult conclusion for the Welsh to accept politically, hence what we saw yesterday.'

The Welsh minister argues that his decision to regrade - the 'what we saw yesterday' - was based on a robust, thorough and timely report from his regulatory staff - nothing political in it, he would say. Amanda did not argue that the decision was beyond the minister's powers.

I do think an apology of some sorts is in order - but let us see if we can get the commitment to three country regulation, ahead of it. [REDACTED] - happy to talk.

As I understand it, the quarrel is with the words 'politically motivated'. These can be interpreted in more than one way.

Might it be appropriate, in responding to the Welsh Government, to say first that setting out ultimatums and shouting at the other party is not a good way to express continued commitment to three country regulation; second, to offer the explanation of Glenys' evidence set out in the earlier draft, and third to note that the statutory position as between England and Wales differs: in Wales, the final decision is a political one, for the Minister to take (and that was what Amanda was pointing out). In England, Parliament has decided on a different approach, whereby an independent regulator is finally accountable for its decisions. Her comment should not be represented as implying that Mr Andrews' decision went beyond his powers, and Ofqual is happy to offer that clarification... Now can we please get back to our joint commitment to good regulation in the interests of learners.....

Turns out the first minister said 'unprecedented', not 'unprecedented and wrong' - by the look of it.
